4) Keynote speech

In the afternoon of October 12, the Opening Ceremony was followed by keynote addresses given by Ms. NAKAZAWA Megue, Chief Researcher, NISE, and Dr. Jude Nicholas, Specialist in Clinical Neuropsychology who is conducting researches at Vestlandet Resource Center for the Deafblind/Haukeland University in Norway. Ms. NAKAZAWA spoke on "Development of Deafblind Education in Japan and Its Contribution to Education for Children with Multiple Disabilities". Based on her ample practical experiences in the field of education and guidance for the deafblind children, she specifically talked about the history in Japan of the education for the deafblind children and the contributions that the knowledge gained from such education and guidance have made toward the subsequent education for children with multiple disabilities in Japan. Dr. Jude Nicholas spoke on "Deafblindness and Neuroscience: Educational Implications". He specifically talked about the outcomes of his researches in the field of neuroscience which included the roles of the brain in the areas of cognition, emotions and physical expressions. He explained the mechanism whereby the brain organizes itself in cases of sensory deprivation. The participants showed great interests in the development of the guidance methods for the deafblind children that incorporated such findings and knowledge.

6) General discussions

In the p.m. of the 14th, general discussions were held based on the national reports and concerning the actual state of children with multiple disabilities in the participating countries and the measures taken. The participants generally agreed on the importance of carrying out educational practices backed by theory, and of sharing the outcomes of such practices, in further enriching and improving the educational support for children with multiple disabilities with sensory impairments. To that end, with this Seminar as an opportunity, they agreed to publish a "Journal of Special Education" to promote the information exchange and share the outcomes of educational practices related with special education in the Asia-Pacific region and also to strengthen the networks between the participating countries. They also agreed to follow up on and further develop the discussions carried out in this Seminar. It was decided for Japan, China, Korea and Malaysia to be in charge of editing this journal, and for Japan to publish its first edition.

A summary of the discussions by the chairperson was followed by the Closing Ceremony.

7) Institutional visit

On the 15th, the participants visited the Yokohama Central Rehabilitation Center for Children (Director: Hara). They inspected the actual scene of individual guidance provided to the area's children with disabilities including those with multiple disabilities with sensory impairments, and facilities such as indoor swimming pool and large play equipment. They heard the Center's operations and the issues that it faced from the person in charge. They showed a great interest in the Center activities, and confirmed that the theories discussed in the keynote addresses were being put to practical application in the actual guidance provided by the Center. In this and other ways, they actively carried out discussions including those with researchers.
